CARRER.

(New York Renad, 26th.)

In a room at the Anthony House, on Breadway, laid yesterday all that was mortal of an American citizen who, during his short life of thirty-seven years, probably shook hands and conversed with more crowned heads than any other living American, saving, perhaps, one distinguised and one mimic general—Ulysses S. Graut and Tom Thumb. It was the lifeless form of the little dwarf Commodere Nutt that lay in what might have served for a child's coffin in the semi-darkened room, with a ray of sunlight streaming asiant the waxen face, on which suffering and pain had teft no impress, while the dead dwarf's wife—a youthful blonde, in stature little below the average blonde, in stature little below the sverage height of woman—her eyes suffused with ears, gazed regretfully on the tiny form draped in the trappings of death, monning gain and again, as she pressed her lips to he ashen brow, "My poor boy, my poor

George Washington Morrison Nutt, for that was the full name of the geoial little manikin, was born on the 1st of April, 1844, at Manchester, N. H. His father was a farmer, holding the position of city marshal. The boy's parents were large, hearty folks, the father weighing upward of 25e pounds, and though he had five brothers and sisters, only one of the family was, like himself, published in a small edition, and with that one his brother, "Major" Rodney Nutt, the dwarf throughout his life maintained the most affectionate relations. Until the orge Washington Morrison Nutt, for the dwarf throughout his life maintained the most affectionate relations. Until the lad was about fifteen years of age bis Liliputian fame had hardly spread beyond his native town, but some time during 1859 P. T. Barroum heard of the Manchester phenomenon and soon made his parents so tempting an offer for his services that in 1860 he was first presented to the gaze of New York sight-seers at Barnum's Museum, Broadway and Ann streets, which then occupied the site whereon now stands the Heraid establishment. tion, not only on account of his small stature—for he was only three feet six inches in height—but by reason of his pleasing manners, lively antics, and unfailing good humor. Unlike most dwarfs, he had a pleasing countenance, and, moreover, was in no way deformed—being, indeed, in period proportion to his height. HIS TOUR ROUND THE WORLD.

In 1869, at the suggestion of Mr. Barnum during the following three years this quar-tette of little folks visited almost every part of the habitable globe where dollars or their equivalent were to be gathered by the exhibition of the "human form divine" in its most condensed shape. Japan, China, Australia, India, Arabia, Egypt, France, England, Ireland, and Scotland were each in turn visited, and at the expiration of three years and a day after leaving New York the little people arrived off Sandy Hook, after one of the longest and most successful starring tours on record. After taking a much-needed rest the "Commodore," who had by this time desclored ages and the starting to the starting and the starting tours. developed some musical and dramatic talent, CHLORAL THYMOL PROPHYLACTIC the Deakin Li lputian Opera Company, and played with some success throughout the country for a year or so. He then went into management, and with his brother, the "Major," opened a variety show at Portland, Oregon; but the venture did not prove particularly successful, and he soon ld out and went on to San Francisco where be started an entertainment of a like nature at the corner of Third and Mission streets, adjoining which temple of the muses he ran a saloon, where as "mine host" he attracted a large daily and nightly gathering of thirsty souls. He tired of Sau Francisco, however, before a year had passed, and again organized a theatrical troupe and travelled with them for some time, but the venture not proving a successful one be again came East and entered into the Commodore was a veritable rolling stone, though be was far more successful as a moss-gatherer than the proverbial bowl-der, and after a few months he abandoned his saloon, and during last summer acted as superintendent at the Rockaway Pier, where his trim little figure, his consequential walk, and merry laugh will still be fresh in the memory of those who visited that salubrious locality in search of healthgiving ozone or the tooth-teasing clam. In February last he was again upon the road with a show, and later still was a member of a hilartous combination known as the FATAL SICKNESS.

Three months back be was overtaken with sickness, which was at first thought to be rheumatism of a malarial type, but some eight weeks ago it became evident that he was suffering from Bright's disease, and though all that medical skill could do to alleviate his sufferings was tried be was seized with spasms on Sunday last, and, rapidly sinking, he passed peacefully away in the presence of his wife and his cousin and manager, Mr. D. C. Purdy, at ten min-mes to 5 yesterday morning. The Commo-dore was a genial, whole-souled little atom of humanity, and will be regretted by a host of friends. His generosity to those who gained his affection was unthose who gained his affection was un-bounded, and it is stated by his cousis. Mr. Purdy, that when Barnum paid him $30,000 for a three years' engagement he gave one-half of the money to his favorite brother, the "Major." Though it was very gene-rally believed at one time that he had mar-ried Minnie Warren this was not the case. The "Commodore" did not enter into the matrimonial state until some two years and The "Commodore" did not enter into the matrimonial state until some two vears and a balf ago, when he espoused in Redwood City, Cal., the lady who survives him. It is understood that he leaves quive a considerable sum of money, but he never made a will. The body will be removed to Manchester, N. H., the place of his birth, today, and will be there interred in the family vault.

Sibh, in referring to Admiral Farragut being lashed to the rigging at the battle of Mobile, you say that Quartermaster Knowies should know, as he lashed him. Now, I positively deny that Admirat Farragut was lasked to the mast, or rigging, or anything, or in any shape during the passage of the forts at the mouth of Mobite bay, or at any time during the engagement. The only thing that could possibly have given rise to the story was that after passing the forts and coming to anchor, being entirely out of range, and all firing having seased, (and the ram, as supposed, having sought protection under the guns of Fort Morgan,) the report was passed that the ram was again coming out, which report was shortly after vertifed by her boldly attacking the feet, and apparently shaping her course direct for the flag-ship. Orders were at once given to heave up the anchor, which was done. Before we had engaged the ram, at this time, the Admiral mounted the port mizzen rigging, going up eight or ten feet, for the purpose of better directing the course of the ship in her attack on the ram, which was coming up on the port bow. At this time Lieutenant-Commander course of the ship in her attack on the ram, which was coming up on the port bow. At this time Lieutenant-Commander Waston (flag lieutenant) asked the Admiral if he had not better be lashed, the object being to prevent his falling if wounded. Quartermaster Knowles was sent aloft with a short piece of rope for the purpose of lashing him, but instead of lashing him he merely passed the rope around his body, passing the two ends around one of the shrouds, and the Admiral twisting them over and holding them in his right hand, thus steadying him as he stood on the outside of the rigging, and making a on the outside of the rigging, and making a pressure against the rope necessary to keep it in its place. Had be been wounded and relaxed the hold of his hand from the rope. it must necessarily have fallen overboard with its own weight. It was not the least protection in preventing the Admiral from falling if wounded.

I was a lieutenant on board of the flagship at the time, and refer to either Lieutenant J. C. Watson (fisg lieutenant) or L. N. Kimberly (executive officer) at the time for a verification of the above. Respectfully,
